

Reflections on relief and rehabilitation work in the Moken community, Lao Island, Thailand: the issue of power relations

September 2008

Written by

Andaman Pilot Project Research Team
Chulalongkorn University Social Research Institute

Supported by

Actionaid (Thailand)

act:onaid

Table of Contents

1. Background of the Moken community on Lao Island	3
2. Moken state of being: marginalized and powerless	5
2.1 The state of “stateless”	6
2.2 Land title and land security	7
2.3 Livelihood security	7
2.3.1 Dependence on middlemen and outsiders	7
2.3.2 Risky work	8
2.3.3 Restriction on subsistent livelihood	9
2.4 Being marginalized “minority”	10
2.5 Social structure: the lack of leadership and community weakness in dealing with new challenges	11
3. Pre-tsunami village and school	12
4. Post-tsunami relief and rehabilitation work: state of confusion	14
4.1 Tsunami impact and post-tsunami rehabilitation	14
4.2 Purpose and effort of community rehabilitation	15
4.3 Problems and obstacles of community rehabilitation	16
4.3.1 Knowledge and understanding of the community	16
4.3.2 Coordination and communication	19
4.3.3 Building community participation	23
4.3.4 Personnel and field staff	24
5. Power relations and the change after rehabilitation effort	26
5.1 Intragroup relations	26
5.2 “Outsiders” and “insiders” in the community	27
5.3 Thai “neighbors”	31
5.4 Government and state social service providers	33
5.5 Rehabilitation agencies/organizations	35
6. The analysis of power relations in the Moken community on Lao Island	37
6.1 Politics of recognition	37
6.2 Marginalization	38
6.3 Spaces, places, and dynamics of power	39
7. The community at present	42
8. Lessons learnt	46
8.1 Lessons of success	48
8.2 Gaps in rehabilitation process and recommendations for future interventions	49
Bibliography	54
Table showing key informants	56
Table showing agencies/organizations/foundations working in Lao Island Moken community	57
